EMANCIPATION DAY.

Celebration of Lincoln's Proclamation of September 22, 1861.

The celebration of the issuance of the first emancipation proclamation by President Abraham Lincoln in Topeka today is under the direction of the colored old soldiers belonging to Fort Pillow post, G. A. R.

The colored men who object to their children and grand children observing as emancipation day the anniversary of the liberation of the West Indies slaves, instead of the anniversary of their own freedom, intend that the 22d of September shall hereafter be observed every year in Topeka.

This forenoon the exercises of the day were opened by a parade on Kansas avenue, headed by the hook and ladder truck and hose company from station No. 8 of the city fire department, which is manned by colored men.

The other organizations in the parade were the colored Dispatch band, the members of Fort Pillow post, and a large delegation of white old soldiers from the local G. A. R. posts.

In addition to the regular banners and flags of the parade, the colored old soldiers carried banners displaying portraits of Lincoln, John Brown and Charles Sumner.

The celebration proper is in progress at the City park, and will be concluded tonight at Hamilton hall.

Jeff Hudson's Candidacy.

Chairman Breidenbach and Secretary Sample of the Populist state central committee say there is absolutely no foundation for the story sent out from Arkansas City, to the effect that Jeff Hudson is again making a canvass of the Third district for the Populist nomination for congress.

Chairman Breidenbach says Hudson has too much good sense to be guilty of a trick of that kind.

DIED IN A COLLISION.

Burdette Hartley Formerly of Topeka Killed in a Santa Fe Wreck.

Burdette Hartley, a popular young fireman on the Santa Fe, was killed at Elmdale this morning in a freight train collision.

The collision was a "rear end" one and occurred at 4:58 a. m.

Extra train engine 617, was standing at the depot. It was eastbound and the way car was at the east end of the platform when regular train No. 32, engine No. 794, Engineer McCauley, also eastbound, pulled into the station and ran into it.

Elmdale is a small station six and one-half miles west of Strong City. The reports at the general offices are very meagre as yet and it is not probable that a full report will be received until Superintendent Turner has made a more thorough investigation.

There was no one in the way car and all except Hartley escaped serious injury. The trains were badly wrecked.

It is not known at the offices who is to blame for the wreck. The extra train should not have been standing there, General Superintendent Mudge says, without having sent a flagman. The engineer on the regular train is to some extent excusable because the accident occurred on a curve and it is possible that he could not see the rear light of the train ahead until it was too late to stop.

Burdette Hartley had been a fireman on the Santa Fe for about eight months. Prior to that time he had been employed in the shops here and had many friends. He was only twenty-three years of age and lived with his parents on Adams street until a few weeks ago, when he was transferred to Argentine, and has since been running out of that place over the Emporia cut-off to Newton.

About two weeks ago his father, who was formerly employed in the shops here, left Adams street and moved to Lawrence, where the family now lives, and where the remains will probably be interred. He was a member of A. O. U. W. lodge, No. 244, of this city.

ORDER MISUNDERSTOOD.

Judge Foster Says Judge Caldwell's Order Does Not Interfere With District Judges.

Judge Foster says that the order filed in the United States circuit court yesterday has no reference whatever to the duties of the United States district judges or the Santa Fe receivership cases. He says that the right of the district judges to make any orders within their respective districts which can be made by circuit judges is not questioned. He says:

"It seems the order referred to was simply intended as a division of the court into three districts, and assigning certain territory to each of the several judges for all business which attorneys might choose to present, but preserving recovery cases now in charge of any judge from any change of management or reason of the assignments under the order. If the order is regarded as a bid for receiver business, I would be glad to unload on the circuit judge every receiver case on the books."

So far as the personal movements of the district judges are concerned, he is simply absurd to suppose they are answerable to any one, as to when and how they shall absent themselves from their district, and they are just as free to go and come as the circuit or supreme judges themselves."

SHE REMAINED TRUE.

And Now Miss Bartlett Wants $150,000 From Her Deceased Estate.

Boston, Sept. 22.—One of the most peculiar cases on record is reported here. Miss Mary E. Bartlett, late of Malden, has brought suit for $150,000 damages against the estate of the late Dr. Henry J. Bigelow for alleged breach of promise of marriage, made by the doctor some time before his death.

She says that she fully believes that the doctor would have kept his promise to wed her had not death intervened. After his death Miss Bartlett tried to recover from his executors $150,000 which she said the doctor promised her if she remained true to him, but they refused to surrender the money. The suit will be tried in the Middlesex court next week.

Dr. Bigelow was one of the best known surgeons of the country. For more than thirty years he was professor of surgery at Harvard, retiring from that place in 1884. He was known throughout the world as one of the leaders of anatomical research, and some of his works are recognized as standards.

Miss Bartlett comes of one of the oldest families of the state and is highly accomplished.

NEW UNION RAILWAY STATION AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

Said to be the largest and best appointed building of the kind in the world. The train-shed covers 424,000 square feet of ground. It has thirty tracks, capable of holding almost 300 cars under shelter, and is illuminated by 125 arc lights. Between the tracks and the main building stretches a promenade called the "Midway," extending the length of the building, 600 feet, and 55 feet wide. From the main entrance one can either go down to the passenger concourse, where tickets are sold and thence to the tracks, or one can go up to the brilliantly-lit rotunda, extending upward the entire height of the building, and covering an area of 8,856 square feet. The waiting-rooms and dining-halls are to the right and left of this rotunda, and above these are 60 well-appointed railroad offices. Above this rises the enormous clock tower, 105 feet square, to a height of 222 feet above the tracks.

A HUNDRED MILES A DAY.

Entertaining a Young Woman Visitor by Taking Her Bicycle Riding.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—Taking a young woman visitor out for a thrilling bicycle ride over roads scarcely equal to the sand-papered courses of France and with the avowed purpose of covering 100 miles each day, may not be an entirely conventional method of entertainment, but it has been adopted by some local members of the Century road club for the benefit of Mrs. Clara B. Stein, who is a member of that organization, residing in Salt Lake City.

Mrs. Stein has ridden three "centuries" in Utah and finds such cycling not deleterious to her health. Her three days of riding hereabouts will be to Milwaukee, to Rockford, to Chicago. She will be escorted by Mrs. Fairchild, Misses Coffey, Berte, Pegerty and Porter, and Messrs. Gunther and Slusher. The party starts this morning.

NO CAUSE.

She Felt It Was Not Wrong to Go Out Driving.

"I think you're the most jealous man that ever got engaged," said Mabel to Jack Hollingsworth, her intended. They had just been comparing notes as to their respective summers.

"I am not in the least jealous," replied Jack. "But I certainly do not think your conduct has been altogether right to me."

"But you stupid fellow, I could not utterly ignore men who were introduced to me," pleaded Mabel.

"Ignore them? No. But you were not compelled to encourage them," retorted Jack, with a frown.

"I never encouraged them," contradicted Mabel.

"How about Charlie Dashington?"

"Well, what about Charlie Dashington?"

"I am quite sure I did not flirt with him."

"Nor encourage him in any way?" queried Jack.

"Not in the least," was the positive rejoinder.

"And yet," argued Jack, "you frequently went driving with him."

"Yes, I did go driving with him."

"Alone and in the evening?"

"Yes," pouted Mabel. "I did. But what of it?"

"Isn't that encouraging a man? Driving with him constantly, alone and in the evening?"

"No, it is not."

"Will you kindly explain to me," demanded Jack Hollingsworth icily as he rose to go, "why such conduct is not direct encouragement?"

"I will tell you why," replied Mabel as she took his hat and came from him. "It is perfectly true that I went out driving with Charlie Dashington a good deal, but never once did I take the reins from him and drive myself."—New York World.

Something Needed.

The elderly maiden lady had sued the rich old fellow for breach of promise and was testifying.

"You say," said the attorney, "that the defendant asked you to marry him?"

"I do."

"And what did you do?"

"I accepted him, of course."

"Why did you accept him?"

"He was different from most men."

"In what respect, pray?"

"He asked me to marry him."

"Ah! Did he protest his love for you?"

"No, I protested at first. Toward the last I consented."

"Didn't you intend to marry him for his money?"

"Of course not."

"Well, do you think that is fair to a man?"

"Certainly I do," she exclaimed.

"You don't suppose a woman wants a man for a husband who has no attractions at all, do you?" And then the attorney let her go.—Detroit Free Press.
